

“The Women of Boulder”

Boulder is a beautiful place but beauty that is a hard, steep, take your breath away kind of beauty. It is a hard place to live especially for the women. As Blom Ormond once said, “Boulder is just a lot of hard work.” The isolation of this place makes a trip to the store at least a days worth of travel. You plan ahead and shop for yourself and usually your neighbor for most of the day when you go to town. As Kim Nelson said “I can substitute any ingredient in any recipe and make it work, you have to be able to do that in Boulder.” Women in Boulder have to be brave enough to face an occasional cougar, an especially aggressive mouse, and putting your child on the school bus every morning to drive across the Hogsback even when it snows. Homes are a distance from each other and socializing takes planning. Boulder can be a lonely place, to survive, it takes good friends, a good garden, and the ability to drive long distances. The women of Boulder are incredible and the Boulder Heritage Festival honors the women this year. These women are the business owners, the public officials, the ranchers, the mothers, the cooks, the singers, the poets, the dancers, the dreamers, the workers, the teachers, and the builders of this community. Thank you to the women of Boulder and to those who came before to teach all of us how to survive this beautiful place.

Dance Traditions of Deseret

(Social Dance in the Mormon West)
Utah's social dance heritage dates back to the pioneer days when immigrants danced between covered wagons by the lights of campfires. Early Utahns' love for music, dance, and for the spectacular beauty of their new homeland grew over the decades. Join Craig R. Miller, Folk Arts Coordinator, Utah Arts Council to learn more of this history.

Dance Calling: Participate in an old time Dance Calling with Craig Miller and the Boulder Town Band, "Out On Bail" for a fun evening of dance. Dance was an important part of Boulder socializing and the history of Boulder. Let's continue the tradition.

Thursday evening activities begin with the arrival of the mail. Each of the other activities will follow in the order listed above.

Schedule is subject to change.
